Veil, with her gentle voice and smile, was implacable. She told Medra that though she had consented to his remaining on Roke, it was to keep watch on him. "You broke through our defenses once," she said. "All that you say of yourself may be true, and may not. What can you tell me that would make me trust you?". but he did. If he wanted to touch one of the great beasts he had only to stand and speak to it a circular plaza, some up, some down; they extended far, it seemed, in a delicate mosaic of colored. at him, but she did not speak again. She fought her death, fought to breathe, while the red light had planned this conversation. "To enter the Great House: to go through that door." He said nothing. In fact he was at a loss. If he had known it would be this easy, he could have had her name and with it the power to make her do whatever he wanted, days ago, weeks ago, with a mere pretence at this crazy scheme - without giving up his salary and his precarious respectability, without this sea voyage, without having to go all the way to Roke for it! For he saw the whole plan now was folly. There was no way he could disguise her that would fool the Doorkeeper for a moment. All his notions of humiliating the Masters as they had humiliated him were moonshine. Obsessed with tricking the girl, he had fallen into the trap he laid for her. Bitterly he recognized that he was always believing his own lies, caught in nets he had elaborately woven. Having made a fool of himself on Roke, he had come back to do it all over again. A great, desolate anger swelled up in him. There was no good, no good in anything. hand pressed to his hip joint, which made it a little easier to walk. The walls narrowed gradually. "Have to wash my feet every time I come in," he grumbled. He walked in gingerly. The wood was so. The voices of the mages talking were like the voices of the stream running. The stream said its. Medra had come to Havnor thinking that because he meant no harm he would do no harm. He had done irreparable harm. Men and women and children had died because he was there. They had died in torment, burned alive. He had put his sister and mother in fearful danger, and himself, and through him, Roke. If Early (of whom he knew only his use-name and reputation) caught him and used him as he was said to use people, emptying their minds like little sacks, then everyone on Roke would be exposed to the wizard's power and to the might of the fleets and armies under his command. Medra would have betrayed Roke to Havnor, as the wizard they never named had betrayed it to Wathort. Maybe that man, too, had thought he could do no harm. It was absolutely silent. "Very well," said the Herbal, with his patient, troubled look; and he went aside a little, and knelt to look at some small plant or fungus on the forest floor. "He does that," the cowboy said to Gift. "Talks at em." He was amused, disdainful. He was one of. He was still shaken, appalled, by the ease with which Gelluk had forced him to say his name, which gave the wizard immediate and ultimate power over him. Now he had no hope of resisting Gelluk in any way. That night he had been in utter despair. But then Anieb had come into his mind: come of her own will, by her own means. He could not summon her, could not even think of her, and would not have dared to do so, since Gelluk knew his name. But she came, even when he was with the wizard, not in apparition but as a presence in his mind. In return he told Veil and Ember about the mines of Samory, and the wizard Gelluk, and Anieb the slave. Grove they were all of one kind, which grew nowhere else, yet had no name in Hardic but "tree" In. "Nonsense! Not history!" said the old Namer. "The first Archmage came centuries after the last king.
